MEDICS have come up with a new contraceptive for fellas - a SWITCH implanted in their manhoods which is worked by a TV-style remote.

The tiny valve - injected into the sperm duct with a needle - was yesterday hailed as an alternative to a vasectomy. It is undergoing lab tests at the University of Adelaide in Australia.

Researcher Derek Abbott declared: "It will be like turning a TV on and off."

(C) The Sun, 2008

News Group Newspapers Ltd.

Document THESUN0020080206e42600015